SAC

Almacén 19 introduces itself as a new industrial space option in Seville for hosting events. It is part of a complex of facilities and storage warehouses located in the port area of Seville. These warehouses housed countries without their own pavilion during the Ibero-American Exposition of 1929.

The initial project addressed its subsequent reuse as a warehouse.

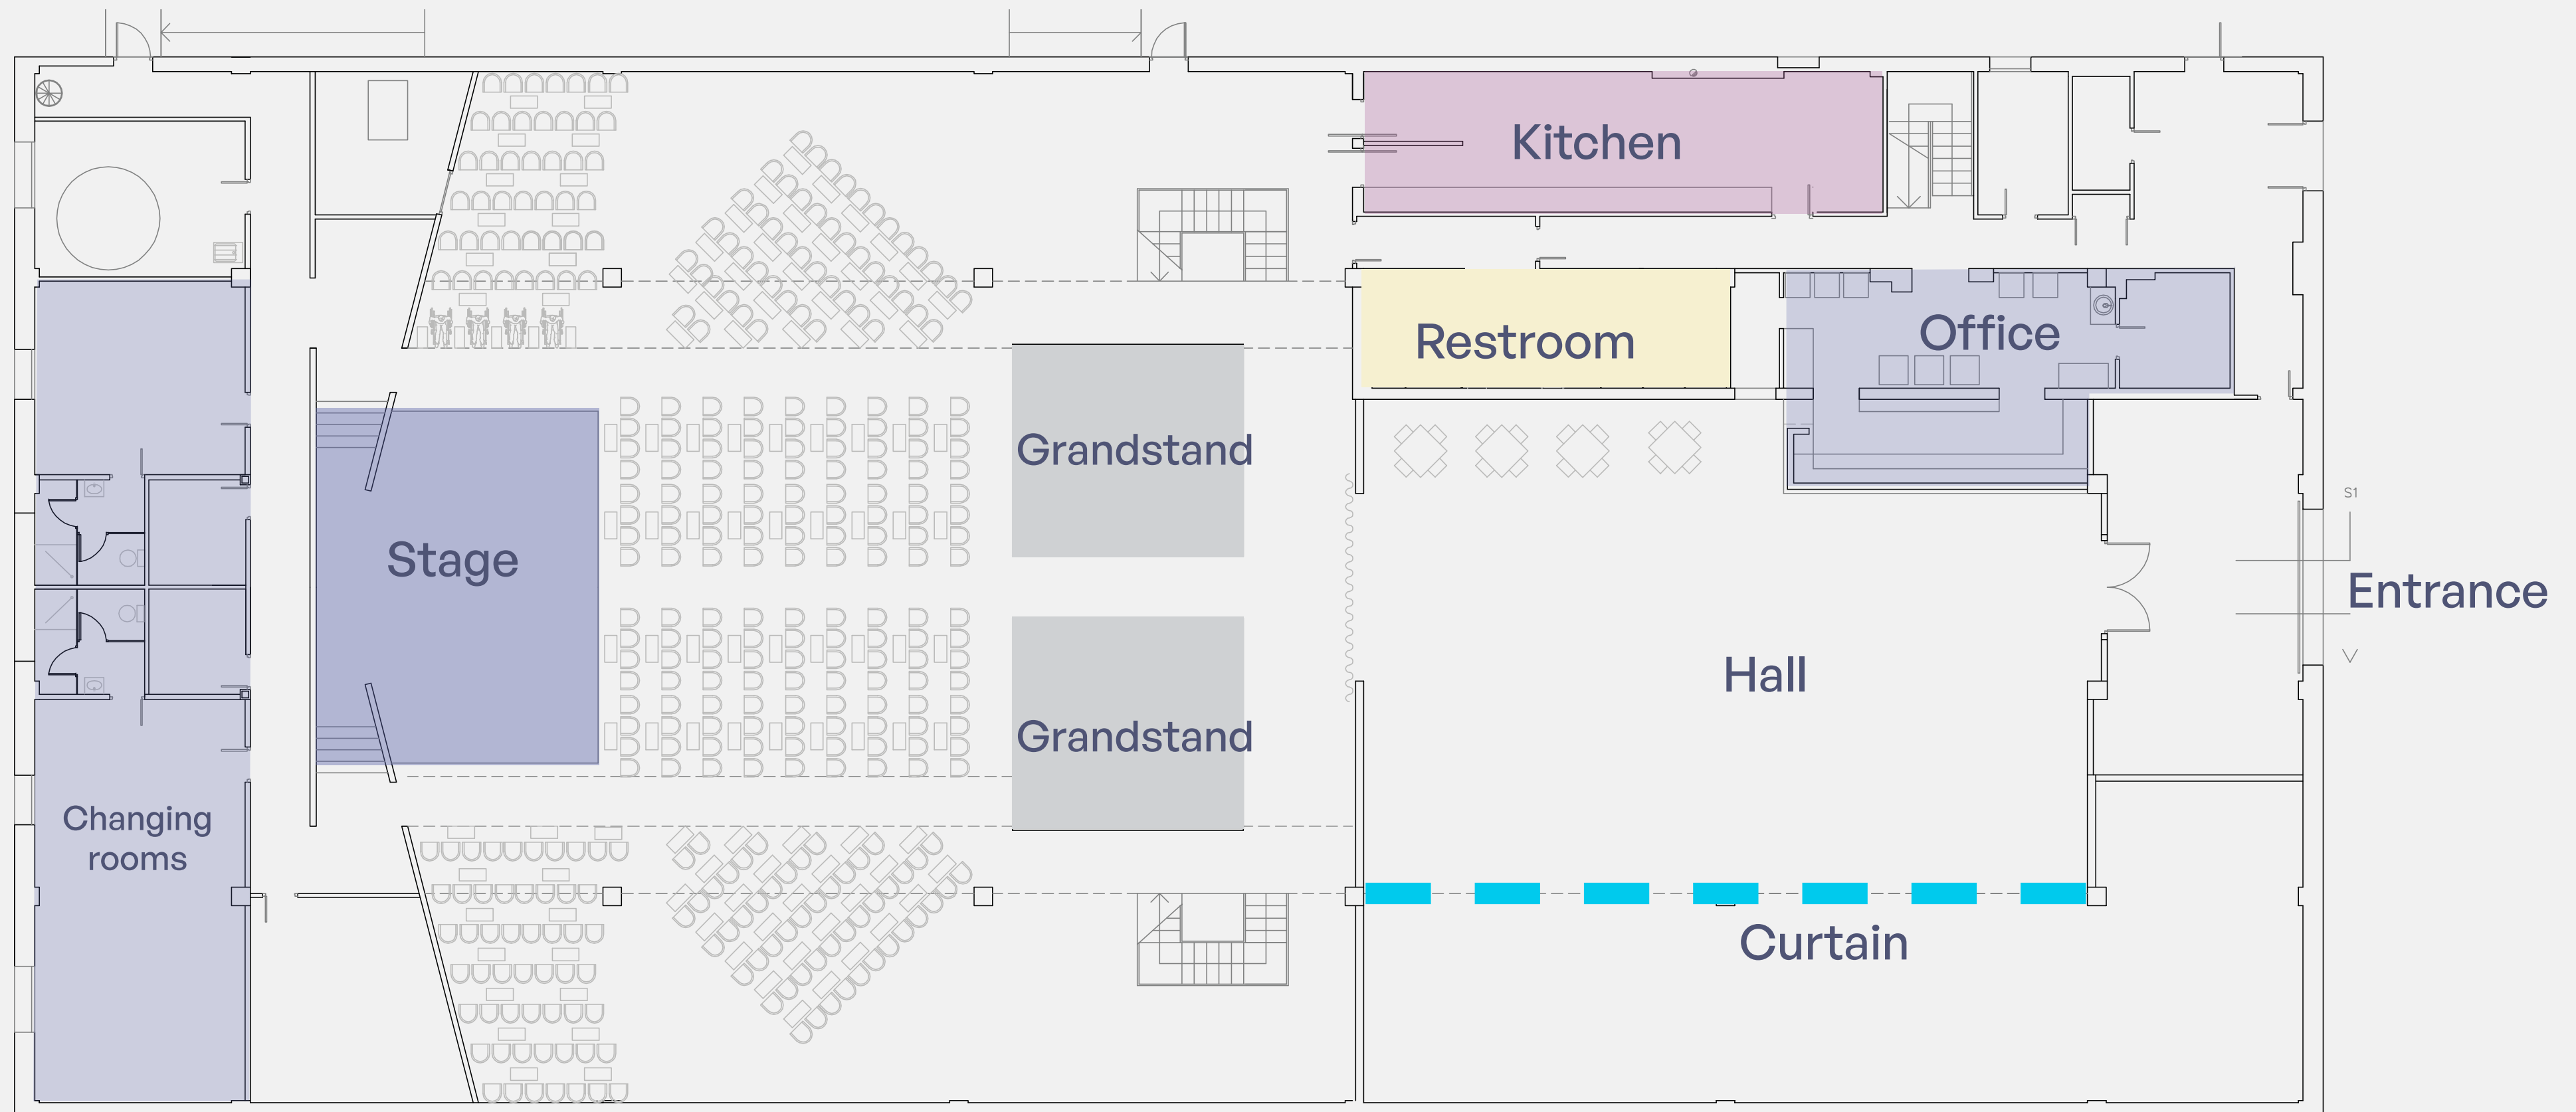

Urban space with strategic interest due to its proximity to the Alfonso XIII Canal, other port activities, and the Reina Mercedes university campus. This set of attached warehouses forms the “Docks of the Port of Seville.” The facade and characteristic elements of the inside composition are distinctive at both the spatial and structural levels.

Almacén 19 has done a comprehensive transformation of its technical provision with a major remodelling to modernize its uses, enabling it to host innovative events from various sectors. It features a distinct space with a capacity for 450 attendees. A small auditorium with a stage and tiered seating. It has a vast hall where various parallel activities such as exhibitions, receptions, and welcoming events, or even catering services associated with any type of event, can be organized.
